or characteristics, which are bred in the bone and brought out in the flesh.

hostesses, Mrs. Bethe H. Small and Mrs. Emma D. Nuckles.

In the New York building, which is next to Missouri's palatial building, and the most perfectly appointed for the entertainment of guests, Mrs. Norman B. Mack will act as hostess. Mrs. Mack is a member of the New York State Commission. She is especially qualified for this office, having served on the Board of Lady Managers at the Pan-American.

She will be assisted by Mrs. Dore Lyon, who is also a member of the New York Commission. Mrs. Lyon is widely known among the women of America as the editor of the Clubwoman, the organ of women's clubs.

Mrs. Emma J. Walsh, who is the presiding genius of the Wisconsin building, will be very cordial and understanding for the peculiar grace with which she receives all comers.

The Wisconsin building is one of the largest and most homelike of the State buildings, and is an ideal setting for the many pretty and useful functions for the women planned for the summer.

Mrs. Theodora W. Youmans and Miss

She has an appetite of which she is not ashamed.

Her cosmetics are dew and sun and flowers.

In spite of exposure she never burns or tans or gets yellow.

Her freckles are of the pale, pretty sort, not the disagreeable, deep, yellow ones.

Her voice is fresh and she talks all day long in a tone which has been called a thrill.

And she has another trait—namely, that of wit, which comes from a superabundance of animal spirits.

These are the things which make the Irish girl not like other girls—the typical girl of summer.

She is the girl of the trees and flowers and the girl whom you associate with the hay and the rake.

A city girl once went into the country to become strong.

She weeded the garden, she raked in the hay and she picked berries and gathered flowers. But in spite of this she did not grow stronger. She lost flesh and lost spirits.

Another girl who went into the country, on similar thoughts intent, came back with a splendid store of health, a store sufficient to last her for many months to come, provided all the year round.

There is a moral to be drawn from this. Or there are several morals, all of which must adorn this tale.

The first is, in going to the country, be sure to select your spot well, or you will come back worse than you went.

WHEN YOU RAKE THE HAY.

Don't, if you are going to be a Maud Muller, rake your hay upon a farm which lies low and is full of damp spots.

There in malaria here, and at night you will breathe it into your lungs.

Be sure that your farm lands are high and dry and that the well is situated in the proper place for a well, not in the barnyard nor alongside any of the buildings.

Be sure also that there is a good farm corner in the kitchen. The proper diet for summer is the diet upon which the Irish girl lives.

This is a diet of cereals, or grains, cooked thoroughly, a diet of vegetables, including the Irish potato, and a diet of fresh fruits and hot bread.

The pretty society girls of Dublin, with

Lacy Morris, who are Commissioners from Wisconsin, will make their residence in the Wisconsin building during a part of the summer.

In the Minnesota building Miss Adelaide J. Murphy will welcome visitors.

Of the eight Commissioners from Connecticut Mrs. J. W. Chapman, Mrs. George R. Kinkaid, Mrs. W. E. Cheney and Miss Anna R. Chappell.

Mrs. A. W. Houston of San Antonio presides in the handsome star-shaped structure erected by Texas.

Miss Estelle Cragg, who is an Assistant Commissioner from Arkansas, is also the hostess of her State building.

Mrs. Henrietta Mansfield, formerly president of the Federation of Women's Clubs and known among newspaper women as the editor of the Idaho Leader at Nampa, is the Commissioner from Idaho.

Mrs. Agnes Brown of Wheeling is the charming Southern hostess of West Virginia's colonial mansion.

Mrs. H. E. Freudenthal, the wife of Senator Freudenthal, is the hostess of the quaint bungalow built for the Nevada visitors; Mrs. T. R. Carson is a Commissioner.

Mrs. Gracia Walton, another gracious Southern hostess, presides in "Beauvoir," the Mississippi building.

Miss Gertrude Drails is the hostess of the Arizona building.

Tennessee is represented by three women Commissioners—Mrs. J. P. Smartt, Mrs. A. S. Buchanan and Mrs. Mary C. Dorris.

Massachusetts sends Mrs. May Alden Ward and Mrs. Sarah Sears.

Miss Mary E. Davis, the wife of the Governor, will preside as hostess of the Illinois building.
